An old negro man named James Henderson, and familiarly known about the city as "Corporation Jim," died last Monday night at the city workhouse, after an illness of same two weeks' duration. The deceased was about 73 years of age, and for something more than thirty years past was in the service of the city government, having been purchased for that purpose at an auction sale of Virginia negroes. A few years after becoming the property of the city, Jim was badly injured by a premature blasting of stone, and rendered almost entirely blind.
